PROVOST

Located in the vibrant and growing capital city of Iowa, Des Moines University is a well-established, leading graduate health sciences institution. Founded in 1898 as the Dr. S. S. Still College of Osteopathy, the University enrolls more than 1,700 students. DMU comprises three colleges: College of Osteopathic Medicine, College of Podiatric Medicine and Surgery, and the College of Health Sciences.

The Provost will be the chief academic officer of the University, and oversee all matters relating to academic programs and personnel, curriculum, instruction, and research. The Provost reports to the President, serves as the second-ranked executive of the University, and is a member of the faculty.

Candidates must have a Ph.D., Ed.D., M.D., D.O., or other terminal degree from a higher education institution with a minimum of seven to ten years of administrative experience in a complex, private or public sector institution. Experience at an academic health sciences setting is preferred.

The agenda for the new provost focuses on leading change. DMU seeks a proven servant leader who will collaborate with and empower others to solve problems by being strategic and aspirational. The provost's primary agenda include strategic planning, partnering with the President, leading with confidence, supporting innovation, and managing with creativity and openness.
